Daniel Reports

By W. C. (Dan) Daniel
Virginia Fifth District Congressman

WASHINGTON: An unusual number of inquiries concerning matters which can have a direct impact on the lives of Fifth District citizens suggests the following comments at this time.

* * *

Many young people and their parents, concerned with the continually rising cost of higher education, have sought information about federal financial assistance programs. As will be recalled, last year the Congress considerably altered the Higher Education Act, and the resulting interpretations by the Office of Education caused much confusion.

One segment of this 1972 Act which will become effective this year is the Basic Educational Opportunity Grants Program, developed to help students pay their educational expenses at any approved college, university, vocational school, technical institute, or hospital school of nursing. This can be in addition to other grant or loan programs, and is based on how much a student or his family can contribute. It is especially gratifying to note that the non-college-bound young person who chooses vocational or technical education following high school is included in this program.

The new program is limited in its first year to entering full-time students who have completed high school and is expected to benefit an estimated one-half million students who might otherwise not be able to continue their education. While I do not believe the federal government has an obligation for universal higher education, never theless, in light of the growing cost this is one more "tool" for those who seek advanced schooling.

A supply of brochures describing this new program has been secured, and a copy may be obtained by contacting our office in Washington or either of the District Offices in Danville or Farmville.

Also of concern to young people is an announcement recently made by Selective Service Director Byron V. Pepitone. The president's authority to induct men into the service expired on July 1, and the administration does not plan to seek an extension. The Department of Defense is relying on volunteer enlistments to supply manpower for the current year. Despite this, the fact remains that under the Military Selective Service Act, which p e r m a nent legislation a nd therefore remains in force, all young men attaining their eighteenth birthday must register within the 30 days preceding or the 30 days following attainment of age 18. It is re-stated for emphasis: this is a legal obligation, and may not be ignored, simply because their is no likelihood of draft.

When OSHA r e gulations were announced in the Federal Register on May 1 regarding re-entry standards in areas where organophosphorous pesticides had been used. Members of Congress from agricultural areas affected immediately set to work to obtain a postponement of the effective date by the Labor Department. Concurrently, suits were initiated in several circuit courts.

Last week, on July 18, the Fifth Circuit Court at New Orleans turned down a motion by the Justice Department that a stay be vacated in the matter of the re-entry standards. Implementation of these standards will therefore await resolution of several suits now pending.

Two significant crops in our District - apples and tobacco - are included in those agricultural products subject to these regulations. it is hoped that hearings may be held to permit development of safe requirements based on sound information rather than the restrictive and cumbersome s t a ndards which have been arbitrarily imposed.

Congress and the administration move at a glacial pace in the matter of energy. Although recent approval of the trans-Alaska pipeline in the Senate and hoped for action in the House will hasten along this partial solution to the problem, the truth is a satisfactory resolution is years away.

If we cannot instantly acquire the additional energy sources we need, we can at least make efforts to conserve some of those we already enjoy. As one example, in the building which houses my office, half the hallway lighting has been turned off, and the air conditioning set up several degrees. Neither action has caused hardship, and is at least an effort - if a small one - toward conserving electricity.

Recently, the Subcommittee on Energy of the Committee on Science and Astronautics prepared a report titled "Individual Action for Energy Conservation," which outlines steps one person can take to reduce energy consumption. We will be pleased to provide copies to those interested in this approach to fuel conservation.

The Pastor Speaks

"LIMITED ATONEMENT"
Rom. 9:11 (Conclusion)

Continuing our thoughts from last week on "For whom Christ died". I am not overlooking the fact that there are some scriptures that refer to the "world" and many have taken these as a starting point in the question of redemption. However, when we compare scripture with scripture we see that the use of the word "world" need not imply every man and woman in the world. "Behold the world has gone after Him", they say that this expression means every kind of person and normally Gentile as well as Jew. You have possibly said before "I believe the world has gone crazy", but you didn't mean every person. The question must always be the devine intension. Did God intend to save all men or did he not? If he did not intend to save all men without exception but only the elect, then the work of Christ's cross is a Glorious success and we right well believe: "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me-----". (John 6:37)

If, on the other hand it was God's intention to save the entire world, then the atonement of Christ has been a great failure, for vast numbers of mankind have not been saved. Christ paid our debt. Whose debt? The debt of the elect's? Surely if a man has been redeemed by a redeemer then the law which he has broken must be satisfied by reason of the work of the surety on his behalf.

The Sunday School Lesson

Herbert C. Bradshaw
P. O. Box 1833
Durham, N. C. 27702

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for Sunday, July 29, 1973.

Topic: Integrity Demands Truth

Scripture: Exodus 20:16; 23:1-3; Proverbs 19:9; Acts 5: 1-11; Ephesians 4: 25-32; James 1: 26; 3: 1-12.

You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor Exodus 20:16.

Bearing false witness against a person is actually stealing, as Shakespeare makes plain in the famous passage in Othello, "Who steals my purse steals trash...But he that filches from me my good name / Robs me of that which not enriches him, / And makes me poor indeed."

The connection may not be immediately obvious, however. Indeed, bearing false witness does such injury to the individual, both the person about whom the lie is told and the person who tells it, that it deserves specific mention in the moral, as well as common and statute law. It is not, then, repetitive to have the commandment, "You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor," along with the commandment, "You shall not steal." Parallel to the structure of the commandments, they reinforce and emphasize each other.

The scrupulous honesty required in material affairs by the Eighth Commandment is required in human relationships by the Ninth. While the common connotation of neighbor is one who lives near one, the definition of neighbor given by Jesus embraces all humanity. Nor is this a far-fetched interpretation, for every plot of ground touches every other plot of ground at the center of the earth, making all people neighbors. Using Jesus' interpretation of the word neighbor, the commandment would read, "You shall not bear false witness against any one."

Bearing false witness against a person-telling a lie about him-damages his reputation and robs him of his good name, as valuable a possession as he has. It deprives him of his right to the reputation he has earned, which, although it may not be listed in any bill or declaration of rights, is one of the basic rights of humankind. A person should have as much right to enjoy the reputation he earns for himself as he has to enjoy the property he accumulates.

Implicitly the Ninth Commandment confirms that right, by prohibiting any infringement of it. This commandment, as the others, was given for human guidance and human benefit. To damage the character of a person by telling a lie about him, works an unjustifiable and sometimes irremediable injury upon him. The commandment covers the broad field of human relationships, as it includes the technical aspect of giving testimony in a court of law. There are occasions in which false testimony may appear to the advantage of the witness or a friend or a litigant who may pay him in one way or another, to bear false witness. Jezebel no doubt made it advantageous or left the impression she would make it advantageous to the two base fellows who would swear falsely that Naboth cursed both God and king. False witnesses a p p e a r ed against Jesus in His trial before the high priest.

In its legal and teachnical perverts justice and enables injustice to prevail. Thus it weakens the foundation of law, as the equal protection of all, by preventing the law from giving equal protection to all. Bearing false witness is as inimical to the civil state as it is to the moral order. All are hurt when false testimony makes possible a miscarriage of justice.

A story from medieval times illustrates the irreparable damage false testimony does. A young man, the story he had told about a fellow villager was false. His conscience bothered him, and he made his confession to the parish priest. For penance, the priest told him to put a feather at the gate of each dwelling in the village and return to him. When the villager returned, the priest told him to go back and pick up each feather. He protested that the feathers would have blown away and could not be found. "So it is with the words you speak," the wise priest told him. "Once let loose, they can never be recovered."
